The Yarra Valley & Dandenong Ranges

Spring comes to the Yarra Valley and Dandenong Ranges as the bulbs unfold their brightly coloured petals and the vineyards bud in soft greens as the next vintage bursts into life. It's truly a time where nature shows off for all to see. The mountains shed their mists, and snow melts into flowing rivers and streams.

There is an emergence - the beauty of nature draws people away from the fireside to wander the villages and forest tracks. Picnic baskets are dusted off for cheese and wine lunches, and the farm gates open their shutters and start to share the spring veggies and seasonal produce that the region does so well. Arts and cultural activities feature prominently on the programs of the region's world-class galleries offering inspiration and experiences that can only be found here.

The open road beckons where driving for the simple pleasure of driving is only enhanced by the stunning sights and destinations that can be found just an hour away. Seek out panoramic views towards the city, winding roads that go forever, and wayside stops that speak to the history of the region and the Indigenous heritage that lives within the hills and valleys.

Spring is often referred to as the season of love, and in the Yarra Valley and Dandenong Ranges it's obvious why! Beauty is all around, and a sprinkle of love makes the season the perfect time for a wedding, a getaway or a day to explore, enjoy and embrace.

Mobile High Teas for Celebrations anywhere

By Emma Beilharz

When you think high teas, you may think it's an activity that your great-aunt and her cronies partake in with their vintage china sets, in between bingo and CWA meetings.

Well, think again. There's a modern take on high teas that is here to stay (if we say so!). You can take high tea in a fancy hotel, but a celebration mobile high tea is a great choice any time of the day or week - a perfect option for an at-home wedding, or to bring the bride tribe together for a pre-wedding catch up. High-teaing with The High Tea Mistress is a unique, personalised experience that is all about you.

A mobile High Tea Mistress event gives you all the choice you need! Get creative with venues - your home, or chosen venue, a gorgeous park or scenic location. Emma can even recommend great partner venues with perfect settings for your special day.

And the venue is just one of the decisions you get to make! You can also choose the day, the duration of your event, menu selections and crockery to theme with your occasion. If you want an ALL chocolate High Tea, you can!

Personalise your wedding or event even further with styled furniture and accessories to create an overall experience – the atmosphere is just as important as the food, tea and crockery. Who doesn't want to watch a sunset atop a ridge sipping tea on an ultra-comfy vintage lounge?

Here are some tips on how to host the ultimate Wedding High Tea.

Food Favourites

A selection of savoury and sweet menu options is recommended but you need to know your guests. A lot of elderly guests prefer savoury flavours, as do some cultures. Pieces should only be the size of one or two bites and be easy to cut (if necessary) and eat with a spoon or dessert fork. People eat with their eyes, so an array of beautifully decorated pieces in a variety of colours works well.

Perfect Pots of Tea

A great balance of black and herbal teas to complement the food menu is best. Teas can be served hot or iced – a great option in summer. High Tea Mistresses have completed Tea Training and are qualified to assist in pairing tea selections with your menu.

Creative and Professional Styling

Create spaces for that overall experience - from a high-end picnic, to a romantic candlelit dinner for two and any gathering in between. The surroundings create the mood for your event and High Tea Mistress stylists can make possible any theme or mood you want for your wedding.

Activities

High Teas are great events for helping guests get to know one another. Be it a bridal shower, rehearsal or catch-up dinner or wedding reception, a High Tea is a great way to connect people. Add a Flower Crown workshop – a popular choice for weddings and a great way to bring guests in on your theme. Tea Blending workshops, interactive High Tea Etiquette & History classes and Gin, Champagne and Whiskey masterclasses can also be included in your day.

And lastly,

DO

RSVP, and be on time. It makes the host's job so much easier and means you'll have the best possible experience.

Dress up. It is the perfect time to put on a fab outfit for the day (especially if it's a wedding).

Have fun! Of course!

DON'T

Over-indulge in alcohol. Think dress, heels, lots of glassware and delicate crockery.

Cross-contaminate serving utensils, and no dunking. No cream spoons in jam bowls!

Use a knife. Scones should be broken in half with your fingers.

Contrary to popular belief, it's not proper etiquette to extend your pinkie finger when drinking tea!

A High Tea can be as chilled or as fancy as you like and might just be the perfect way to celebrate your big day!

In the flow of a Spring Wedding

Spring makes her presence felt in the soft folds of cherry blossom, in kisses of warming breezes and the turning of winter scenes to green vistas. The vines burst into life with tiny tendrils reaching for the sun, and the fruit trees follow suit, exploding bud and blossom in impossible displays of beauty. If ever there was a time to get married, spring is the perfect season for floral splendour, lengthening days and clear skies. Spring is love, and love is spring.

While the spring is considered the official start of the traditional wedding season, making vows of forever love can happen any time of the day, any time of the year. If a Saturday wedding in spring means booking a year or two in advance (and who can wait that long?), then spring brings the ease of a twilight wedding, a midweek wedding, an any-day-of-the-week wedding because there is no rush when you have open hearts and an open agenda. From a small intimate wedding to a luxe grand affair, the Yarra Valley and Dandenong Ranges has the perfect springtime setting to make your day.

In spring the doors burst open and the outdoors beckons us with secret gardens, forest aisles and hill top odes to the love you share. Think beyond the 'norm' and find ways to express your love in a ceremony that says 'us'. There are wild places to get married where nature is your chaperone (try the Redwood Forest), and there are carefully curated settings that ooze love (see Cloudehill Gardens for inspiration).

And there is the unusual and the delightful. An orchard of cherry blossom makes for a sweet walk down the aisle (and the perfect background for an on-trend rosey pink-gold wedding theme), but you may find the million bright blooms of a tulip farm equally as attractive and Tesselaars may just be a perfect love bubble for you both. Colour co-ordinate with fields of lavender or a stunning wisteria arbour to bring a subtle purple haze to your day.

There are so many ways love blooms in a spring wedding. Let's embrace them all.

Flower & James

get hitched

Jogiya Falguni (Flower) and James Mitchell

A colourful three day wedding in Warburton celebrates multi-cultural love and the bringing together of what really matters.

Meet the couple

James and Flower both work in the sales industry, James as a cybersecurity expert and Flower as a dental supplies specialist. The couple met via a dating app while both were living in London and were immediately drawn to each other. Flower says, "I liked his easy going chats – he was unique and oddly attractive! And an all-round, well balanced guy – that was refreshing."

Flower says James told her she was real and authentic – a breath of fresh air! "There was a real curiosity between us given our different cultural backgrounds and an appreciation of the uniqueness that brought to the relationship."

Who proposed?

James proposed to Flower at sunset on Brighton Beach in the UK. The destination of their first holiday, the proposal was beautifully timed with their third anniversary. The couple had 'like grownups' decided to get married, especially as James was relocating to Australia to be with Flower, so they had designed the ring together. The proposal was the first time Flower actually saw her dream ring in reality.

What was your wedding theme?

“Indian weddings typically go for five days but we were a little more restrained and held our wedding over three days! We wanted to bring together both cultures and traditions, but the colour and the theme of all three days was definitely Indian/Gujarati.”

“Day one is called Sangeet. Dance is at the heart of a traditional pre-wedding celebration. We brought in a Bollywood dance teacher to our party in Christmas Hills, who taught our guests a cheesy Bollywood dance routine. It was a real highlight and brought everyone together regardless of cultural background or whether they’d met before. We had a bindi station and bangles for guests to wear because it’s all about colour and noise! On day two, the men and the women separate and the bride gets her mehndi, then on day three the wedding ceremony, rituals and dinner is celebrated.”

How did you choose your ceremony and reception venue?

“Our engagement party was inspired by an Alice In Wonderland production we had enjoyed, and we really went over the top to create an Alice theme at a bar called ‘Through the Looking Glass’ in London. We had a bit of a reputation for going ‘all out’ so when it came to our wedding in Australia, we wanted to do everything to make it memorable and special. We’d looked at a few wedding venues and we just couldn’t warm to the cookie cutter approach of many of them. Then we discovered Projekt 3488 on the internet. We loved everything about it and just chatting to Mark on the phone we felt so good. When we walked in the door it was more than we ever imagined. It was off the charts unusual.”

Is there a story behind your dress and veil?

“The dress code for all three days was colourful – in fact it’s not appropriate to wear black to an Indian wedding. Many of our guests went all out and wore saris or lengha, including our Australian friends. My dress was a traditional Indian sari dress and embroidered veil; however, I chose to wear vibrant blues, rather than the traditional bridal red. James got in the spirit of things and had an Indian outfit (dhoti) made but when he tried it on it just didn’t feel right. He ended up making a trip to Dandenong where he found a wonderful Indian long jacket with stunning gold embroidered sleeves and pants for the day. He did it his way.”

What made your wedding unique?

“We had food trucks at our dance party and then the remaining days were catered by Jesse from Locavore. All of our food was vegetarian (people said they didn’t even realise because it was so delicious) and the meals on the day three soiree were vegetarian Indian Banquets. The ceremony alone goes for about three hours with guests arriving at 10am and leaving about 7pm. Projekt 3488 was amazing as we were able to move among different areas of the building and gardens, and it provided such a dramatic setting for our many ceremonial aspects.”

What makes your marriage?

“When you want to be with someone you embrace all that they are. Bringing together two cultures is somewhat of a roller coaster, but it brings meaning and uniqueness to your life. Since the wedding I’ve found myself reflecting a lot on my culture, and how I preserve my cultural self for me, and my future children. There’s an urge to revisit my roots, and James is with me every step of the way.”

Tell us about any other special elements of your day.

“My mum handmade about 250 colourful tassels that we used to decorate the dance hall and then Projekt 3488. They took her a whole year to make and were so bright and festive.

We gifted all our guests with a custom made tiffin tins engraved with the message ‘Eat, Sleep, Love, Repeat’. They were used for dinner and were then a wedding favour.”

What's your best advice for planning the perfect wedding?

"Don't forget your honeymoon! We still haven't been on ours. I think all our focus was on the wedding. And most of all, enjoy it. All of it. Our day was like a brilliant diamond."

What were the highlights?

"My mehndi day on day two was beautiful. It's one day in your life that Indian girls look forward to. You are pampered for hours on end by the women in the family and mehndi (or henna) is done on the hands and feet in preparation for the wedding day. It's a day of fun and laughter. The guys had a more traditional Aussie BBQ catch-up together at their accommodation."

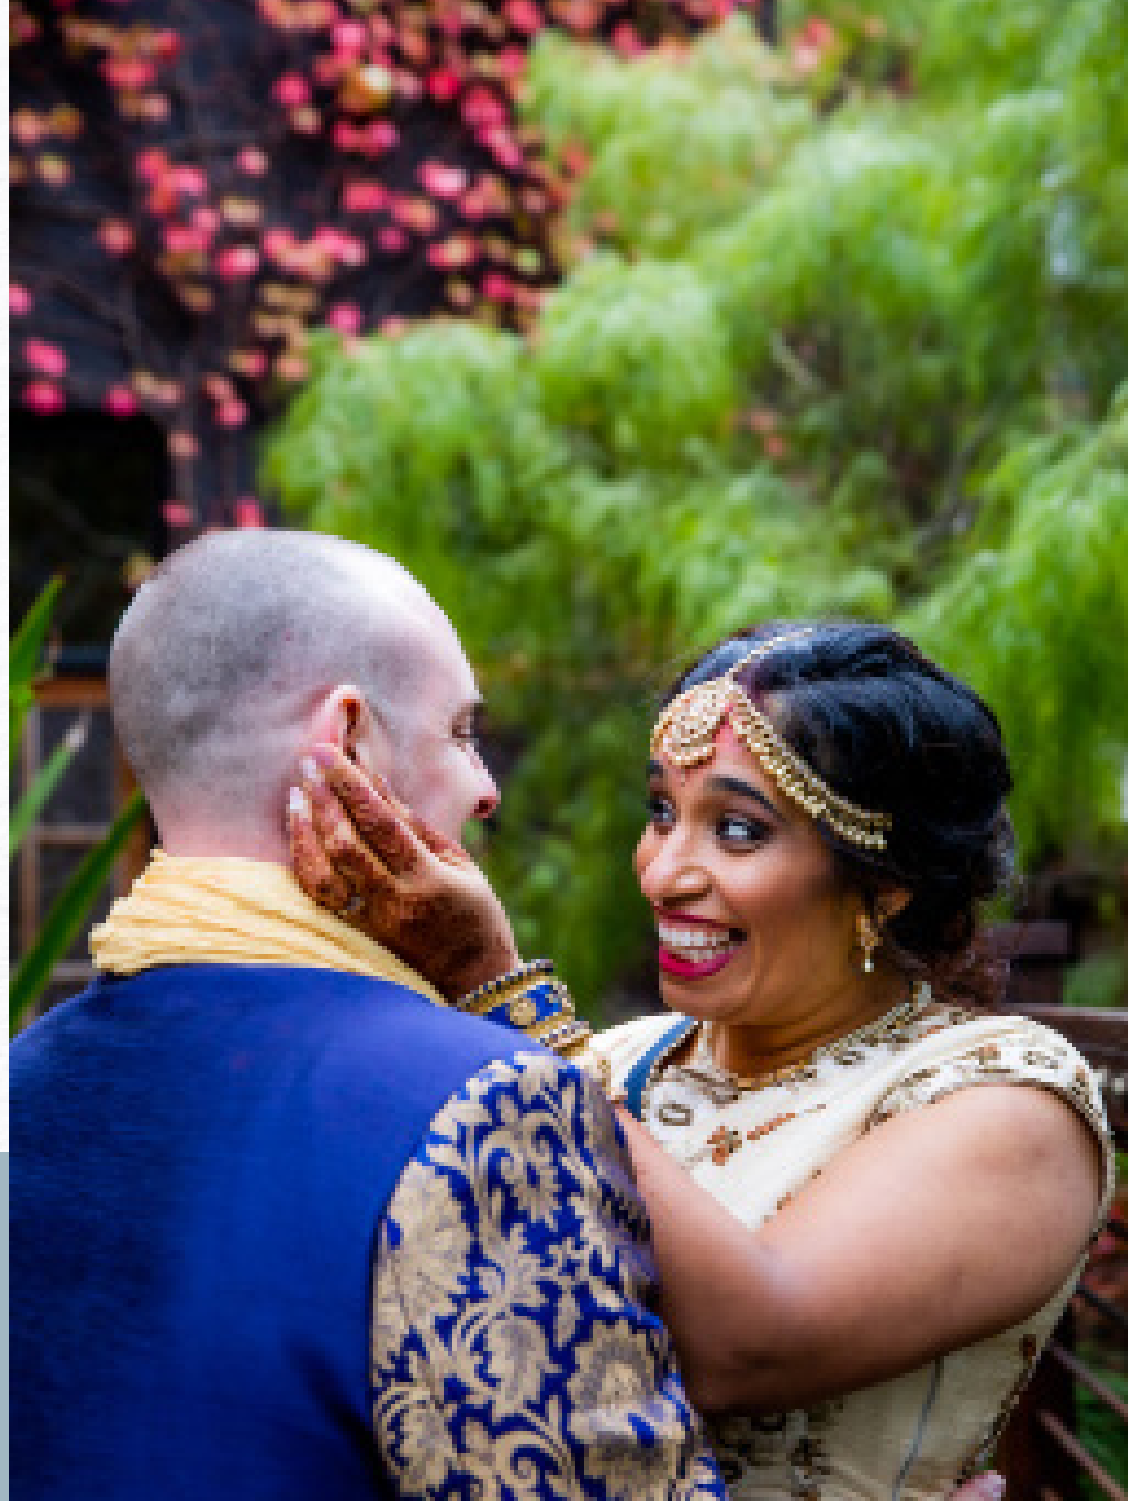

Anything else you'd love to share?

"Indian couples should really consider Australia for their wedding. You can have everything here to make your dream a reality. And have a laugh. We're best mates and our wedding was a true expression of who we are and the enjoyment we share in being together. That is universal."

Timed to perfection

The later in life marriage

By Michael Veitch

Caroline and Stuart

Caroline simply had no choice but to say 'yes' to Stewart. How else, after all, was he supposed to stay in the country? But this is more than just the story of a fella in need of a visa. When the big day came, standing in his fineries on the elegant steps of the Victorian Treasury Building, Stewart caught sight of the woman who was soon be his beautiful bride. Turning to his mum - who'd come all the way from England for the big event - all he could manage was, "Look at her, Mum, just...look at her," before bursting into tears.

Stewart and Caroline's story ranges over several decades, from when they first got together when Stewart came to these shores in his twenties, to the relationship winding up upon his return to London. Caroline's first marriage, a son, and then a divorce intervened, until a Facebook reconnection with long-lost Stewart led to a holiday with friends past and present at a cottage in Burgundy, and the rekindling of a fire that one suspects had never quite gone out in the first place. "Things went well," is all Caroline says.

All the ingredients of a Rom Com right there, you might say, minus perhaps the proposal, delivered by Stewart down the phone from London a few weeks later. "So, Caroline, I really want to be with you," he popped, "but my Australian residency has expired - so we'll have to get married. How about it?"

How was the girl to resist? Luckily for him he still had his East London accent.

"We had to get married," says Stewart, "but luckily we wanted to anyway." Stewart freely confesses his surprise at the depth of emotion that overwhelmed him on the day. Later this year, he'll take part in another ceremony, that of his Australian citizenship. He might find himself surprised by that one, too.

Pete and Nate

Pete and Nate's big day was picture perfect: surrounded by a hundred or more family and friends at the Western Oval – home to their beloved Bulldogs – a beautiful, sunshine-bathed ceremony morphed into a party where kids both young and old celebrated, and kicked the footy around the hallowed turf. In the evening the big lights were turned on, allowing the fun to continue well into the night.

As joyous event as it was however, at the end of the day Pete and Nate were not a single step closer to actually being married. This was simply their 'affirmation ceremony' – a purely civil affair or, as Pete puts it, "our very expensive engagement party". For it to be legal, they would have to wait another two years for the law to change when Australia finally staggered – exhausted and punch-drunk – over the threshold of marriage equality to bring it into line with most comparable western

Like many people lucky enough to grow up in a large and loving family, Pete's view of marriage was a happy one. For forty years until his father died, his parents were devoted to one another, and he can barely remember a harsh word passing between them. As positive as his view of marriage was, however, it was an institution from which he was, for decades, barred.

When Pete and Nate were finally able to officially marry, there was no question they wouldn't do it all again. "I'd spent so long fighting and being angry about not being able to be married," says Pete. "Now that we could, we simply had to. All I ever wanted was to walk in the street holding my partner's hand, and for us to be able to legally refer to one another as 'my husband.'"

Second time around, the setting had moved to a beach in Noosa and the weather was not quite so kind. It was, however, on the very day of Pete's fiftieth birthday, and the party was just as good, marking both an end, and a beginning of a journey for them both.

Le and Michael

Having survived well into his forties without ever managing to tie the knot, Michael wanted to arrive at his own wedding in style. In a flash of retro-styled inspiration therefore, he hit upon emerging – a la James Bond in ‘Thunderball’ – from the deep, replete with scuba gear, before making his way up the riverbank through his astonished guests to stand beside Le, his partner of ten years and now bride. Practicalities however, have a habit of intervening, and although his beloved would have undoubtedly swooned at the sight of her dripping aquanaut groom, it probably wouldn't be for the right reasons. The upper Yarra River at Warburton isn't, after all, the Caribbean, and in summer it's not even all that deep. So, keeping to the theme, a down river arrival by canoe was decided upon, and it all went, well, swimmingly. Michael's feet even remained dry for his and Le's beautiful afternoon in the mountains.

Unlike Michael, Le had been through it all before, when she was first married in her twenties. Back then though, it was as much, as she puts it, ‘an identity thing’.

Twenty or so years later however, it was all about her two children, and a celebration of life in general. “Being older”, says Le, “we were much more relaxed about it. I feel I got it right - the second time”. And cheaper too, with friends, family and favours called in to help with the catering. “We had about 120 happy and well fed and watered guests for around five thousand dollars”, she says. “It was a genuine hand-made fiesta!” Who says a good time has to be expensive?

* * * * *

Three weddings of three couples who all, for differing reasons decided to marry after forty. And by the stories they tell, and the memories they now cherish, it seems to have been the perfect time to do so.

Engagement Story

Will you be my one?

at Zonzo Estate

Jess and Carly Wilde's double proposal

A romantic candlelit dinner in a Balinese resort was an epic location for a proposal and when Carly asked Jess to be her wife in November 2016 the couple, who were both vets when they met, easily embraced the life of an engaged couple and started planning their big day.

But six months later, Jess decided that the love of her life, Carly, also deserved the experience of being proposed to and receiving a ring, so she put a plan in action to create a surprise proposal that was full of personal symbolism and love.

From the first time the couple saw the elegant Cappella at Zonzo Estate they knew they had found the perfect location for their wedding ceremony. Many of their first dates had revolved around wine with Carly sharing her passion for wine appreciation with Jess, and Zonzo, with its amazing food, beautiful design principles and lush surrounds was the 'everything' they imagined.

Jess put in motion a plan to get the unsuspecting Carly to Zonzo on the pretext of attending a Bridal Expo one Sunday, and with the help of the Zonzo team, which even included sending a fake email invite to Carly, the plan was put in motion.

“I proposed to her in front of the Cappella and she was still trying to figure out what was going on. Everyone was crying (including the Zonzo team). I had to keep telling her I’ve done this for you!”

“I guess I knew what the answer would be – we were already engaged but it was wonderful to see the love of my life able to experience all the joy of a proposal that she had given me. Carly was blown away,” says Jess.

In November 2018, the couple married at Zonzo Estate in the same Cappella with a reception to follow. Carly says, “Married life is just as good as pre-married life! We always think along the same lines and make the same decisions. Being together is everything.”

“And I’d choose you;
In a hundred lifetimes,
In a hundred worlds,
In any version of reality,
I’d find you and
I’d choose you.”

Jess had the Cappella set up with Carly’s favourite flowers – muted pastels, roses in pinks, creams and apricots, a poster with all their favourite quotes – and had secreted an iPod into the chapel ready to play their favourite heart song ‘Say you won’t let go’.

“Just as we were about to walk up to the Cappella, Carly veered off saying she needed to use the bathroom. Then she started looking around for the ‘fake’ expo,” says Jess. “Thankfully I was able to distract her, and get her to follow me once again to the Cappella.”

By then, Jess couldn’t wait another second to pop the one big question,

“Will you be my one?”

Unusual ceremony locations

Unique places to declare your own kinda love

By Robynne Mauger, Rainbow Celebrant Yarra Valley

All photos supplied by Robynne Mauger

“So, tell me your story”, I ask every one of my loved-up couples when we meet. Every couple has their own unique story to tell. And I love that feeling when you are drawn into their private places where they share the journey that got them wanting to be married. Romantic conversations flow, love stories are told, and happy tears are wept; so much so that the emotion takes over and grabs hold of your heart. Such is the power of love when eyes are locked, and hearts are open.

How do people choose their own place to be married? Sometimes a couple will have it all teased out, but mostly they will just know once they start the love story of how they met and why, a certain place takes hold of their emotions. A first meeting, a first kiss, a proposal. A celebration that captures their connection with each other and provides an insight for their guests into that place that ensures they have experienced the ultimate moment in time.

“We fell in love on a mountain top.”

So I suggested the couple seals their marriage on that mountain top where all their memories will come flooding back. And we did. On Skyline Road, Yarra Glen where the vistas were boundless and Bunjil visited. A private moment of peace and tranquillity, where time stood still and travelled a million miles at the same time. Bunjil’s visit was very important and added depth to the ceremony. A true union in privacy and tranquillity.

“We met in Thailand.”

We met in Thailand where we talked the night away about all things relating to Thai martial arts; so let's come out of your corner, not fighting, ready to declare a victory for love. A love of all things Thai related and martial arts was the link. The ceremony was conducted in the boxing ring that was the central focus of the martial arts studio. Gloves were on and off, promises were made, passion and places. The colour scheme was matched to the studio colours and food was a fusion of Thai meets Australia.

“Our eyes locked over a vintage guitar.”

“We met at a jam session; and music continued to remain a focus in our relationship. Our eyes locked over a vintage guitar.” Our music is very retro and our lives match the beat. Warburton Motel captured the atmosphere with all things 70s. Authenticity and originality was paramount, and it set the perfect scene. The glitz and glamour shined in the shade of the old spruce tree as vows were said and drinks flowed from the back of a Kombi.

“In the heart of the forest.”

Deep in the heart of Redwood Forest, so quiet you could hear another's heartbeat. The stormy clouds parted, the rain held off and the sun shone deep down as two special people committed their lives in marriage with only their family as witnesses. Private, passionate and poignant. Hearts beating loudly. Commitment cemented and a rainbow hung over us all. The coloured sands were symbolic of the enmeshment of two families, with each member adding their own colour to the vase.

“For the love of cowboy boots.”

Cowboy boots and tattoos. That is what we had in common. Animals, tattoos and the raw outdoors. The horse ménage was decked out with row seating, a flower arbour the focal point, and hay strewn down the long aisle. Those boots sashayed down the aisle to the sound of goats bleating and horses neighing. Nothing was going to interrupt those vows.

Wedding day etiquette

Tradition is optional...

By Lisa Newman – Civil Marriage Celebrant

It's a whole new world for weddings these days with many people choosing non-traditional ceremonies – from bridesmen and best girls to having wedding arches made from sticks!

As a Marriage Celebrant here in the ever-changing, picturesque Dandenong Ranges, I'm surrounded by traditional venues with a glorious array of gardens, gazebos and chapels. They cater to sit-down receptions with delightful table set-ups and stunning centre pieces. They are, simply put, charming and oozing tradition. However, many Yarra Valley venues are opting for industrial wedding spaces – a cocktail reception held in a winery shed, a grazing table and minimalist set-up. They scream 'fun and funky' and attract couples often catering to smaller guest numbers. This works especially well during off peak season and alternative weddings.

But let's start at the beginning with the white wedding dress! Queen Victoria wore white to marry Prince Albert in 1840. Despite the white dress being favoured for some 180 years, coloured dresses are making a come-back. Over the last decade, brides have been wearing ivory, champagne, white with black trim and now, we're seeing subtle colours of mocha, pink and florals.

I love how diverse weddings have become now with uneven numbers in the bridal party (oh yes you can!), and how's this for fun? – boys attending on the girl's side and vice versa. Fabulous names have popped up – gal pals, man of honour, best girl and bridesman... the list goes on and is very on-trend.

Speaking of keeping up to date – same-sex marriage. Nope, it's just marriage, just like everyone else's. So take note and remember that we don't need to distinguish anymore.

And lastly, who pays for what? Thankfully, those days are gone where the bride's family pays for everything. It's been standard for a long time now that either the couple foot the bill or it's split three ways between the couple and both sets of parents. But if parents are contributing, they usually want a say in who is being invited so this may mean you'll have cousins coming that you haven't seen since you were 11!

However you choose to get married, enjoy the freedom of choice available to you now that tradition is optional.

Did you know?

In 2017, 78% of marriages in Australia were performed by civil celebrants.

Summertime Love

Any day of the week, any time of the day – summer has so much charm for a wedding celebration. Hold your ceremony with the rising dawn, or in the cool of evening – it's your choice! How about a pool party? There are plenty of waterside locations that make for perfect ceremony spots that will beat the heat of the day. Get hitched by a waterfall (there are seven fabulous waterfalls to choose from in the region), lakeside, or against the soaring presence of Maroondah Dam (super shady!).

Toast your new life together with a sparkling wine that is the toast of the region (how well does the Yarra Valley do Prosecco! – just sayin') and enjoy the succulence of the region's fresh picked produce – berries, cherries, fruits, and everything you love that says 'summer love'.

Plan an Off Peak summer wedding – move beyond the Saturday wedding and discover how much flexibility and lush loving is available every other day of the week. It's your day, your way.

What makes summertime in the Yarra Valley and Dandenong Ranges such a perfect time to get hitched?

Getting out of the city in summer holds enormous appeal for couples and their guests. Out into the cool green landscapes of mountains and forests, vineyards and fields. Places where there are shady glades that provide a cool oasis even when the temperature is rising. Where the vista is always green as far as the eye can see, and there is space for the natural fanning of gentle breezes and soft summer nights.
